

The guiding principle of the Rondel Society, named to invoke the iconic emblems found throughout the Romanesque architecture of the University, is philanthropic and intellectual engagement with the Stanford University Libraries in the company of like-minded individuals. In keeping with this philosophy, donor-directed purposes for gifts are actively encouraged.

The Rondel Society is integral to the endeavor of sustaining one of the world's premier academic libraries at Stanford.

THE RONDEL SOCIETY

The Libraries rely upon the intellectual, as well as financial, engagement of Rondel Society members. Some members are long-term stakeholders in collections or projects of the Libraries, working directly with curators, editors and others to provide library resources for the global and interdisciplinary academic initiatives of The Stanford Challenge. A growing number of members are themselves notable collectors or active in book arts organizations.

Prospective donors are invited to consult with staff of the Library Development Office to align the donor's charitable interests with Library and University needs. Some members contribute to the library general gifts fund, which allows the Libraries to allocate funds flexibly for timely or urgent purposes.

Membership is recognized at suggested levels of one thousand dollars for the Bibliographer's Circle, five thousand dollars for the Curator's Circle, and ten thousand dollars for the University Librarian's Circle. The Rondel Society will recognize, with special distinction, members who have given or pledged in aggregate to the Libraries fifty thousand dollars or more.

Most of all, Rondel Society members share with the University Librarian, and by extension with the many library, academic computing and publishing specialists at Stanford, a powerful vision for the expanding role of research libraries in the twenty-first century, a role fulfilled by an evolving integration of books and other physical documents, digital resources and tools, adaptable and inviting library spaces, and specialists dedicated to helping students and researchers.
